Introduction

In the NHL, are some officials more likely than others to have officiated a game with a prolific individual player performance?

Utilizing regular season NHL game and player data spanning from 10-05-2005 to 03-11-2020, we produce the frequencies of officials in games where a player scored 4 or more goals.

Methodology

To answer the achieve the above result we use two objects from the given database: "nhl_gameDate_1" and "nhl_playersDate_1". The first database object provides information on game date, visiting teams, home teams, and the names of the officials. The second provides information on a player's first name, last name, the team, and total goals scored in a game. By joining these two database objects together, and filtering for players that scored more than 3 goals, we provide an answer to the above question of interest.

Results

The first table describes the basic information associated with all games in our data where a player scored more than 3 goals. This table includes the date of the game, the player's first and last name, team name, as well as their time on ice and total goals scored. On the right-hand side of the table, there is also information regarding visiting and home teams alongside the list of officials for that game.

The second table shows the frequency of officials who officiated games where a player scored more than 3 goals. In this table we see that officials Matt MacPherson, Steve Kozari, Brad Meier, Dan Schachte, David Brisebois, Mark Wheler, and Tim Peel all officiated 5 or 6 games where at least one player was capable of scoring more than 3 goals in a single game. This seems to be rare occurrence since most officials have 2 or less occurrences officiating games with prolific player scoring.
